

Integrative Psychological Services of Seattle (IPSS) is growing and looking for a full-time psychologist to join our group practice. We are a small, collegial group of trauma-focused providers who work in Seattle's Fremont neighborhood. We are looking for someone who is interested in providing high-quality, evidenced-based, trauma-informed care through psychotherapy and/or assessment services.

Unique aspects of IPSS:

- You are hired as an employee, not as an independent contractor, allowing you to spend more time with clients, less time on administrative tasks.
- We compensate based on a graduated payment model which allows you to take home a larger percentage of income based on volume of work.
- You can participate in an innovative practice model where mental and physical health care is coordinated by psychologists. IPSS psychologists regularly refer to our in-house, trauma-informed physical therapist.
- You create your own schedule and change it according to you and your clients' needs.
- Samantha Slaughter, PsyD, the CEO, is an active participant in the Washington State Psychological Association and the Practice Organization of the American Psychological Association. She stays current on the latest in the business of private practice with the goal of leading IPSS to a thriving future.
